Source 1

The following is an edited extract from a 2016 High Court judgment summary: New South Wales Aboriginal Land Council v Minister Administering the Crown Lands Act (2016) HCA 50.

Today the High Court, by majority, dismissed an appeal from the Court of Appeal of the Supreme Court of New South Wales. The majority held that land in Berrima which had been the site of a gaol¹ and correctional centre ("the claimed land") was not claimable under s 36 of the Aboriginal Land Rights Act 1983 (NSW) ("the ALR Act") because it was "lawfully ... occupied" under s 36(1)(b) of that Act. ...

By grant of special leave, the NSW ALC [Aboriginal Land Council] appealed to the High Court. A majority of the High Court held that the claimed land was occupied at the date of claim by reference to the activities taking place on it, and that it did not need to be actively used for its dedicated gaol purposes to be "lawfully occupied" as that would deny "occupied" a separate sphere of operation from "used" in s 36(1)(b).

The majority considered the NSW ALC's argument that the claimed land could not lawfully be occupied without statutory authorisation. It held that s 2 of the New South Wales Constitution Act 1855 (Imp) did not abrogate the executive's power to appropriate waste lands to itself by way of dedication, use or occupation. Rather, s 2 made the executive's power over waste lands subject to the control of the legislature of New South Wales.

The majority rejected an argument that CSNSW [Correctional Services NSW] was not empowered to occupy the claimed land. As the owner of the claimed land, the State [NSW] could lawfully occupy the claimed land through the executive government and its agents, including employees of CSNSW.

The following is an edited extract from an online article by Stewart Jackson, Lecturer, University of Sydney and published in The Conversation (19 May, 2019) entitled 'Abbott's loss in Warringah shows voters rejecting an out-of-touch candidate and a nasty style of politics'.

On election night 2019, as Australia voted to return the Liberal-National Party government of Scott Morrison, one seat defied the trend – Warringah. ...

Abbott was blamed for destabilising the party since losing the prime ministership himself in the lead up to the 2016 election. ...

This sense of being out of touch, perhaps most strongly exhibited by Abbott's continued insistence that he would come back to lead the Liberal Party if he was asked to, even when Liberal voters were strongly opposed to this, propelled Steggall's attempt to wrest the seat from Abbott.

Abbott's own preselection, which might have been thought uncontroversial, was a scene of anger and dismay. Although he won 68% of the votes to endorse him, this also implies that even party members were losing patience with his activities within the party. ...

The result in Warringah must be seen as a local phenomenon, especially when taken against the backdrop of the general election and the failure of some other high profile campaigns.

The GetUp! Campaign in Peter Dutton's seat of Dickson would appear to have had limited effect, considering that Dutton had a 2% swing towards him. Several high-profile candidates who it was thought would struggle to retain their seats (George Christensen in Dawson, and Barnaby Joyce in New England) recorded double-digit swings towards them, suggesting their voters may or may not approve of their personal behaviour, but they do endorse the direction of their party.

This again emphasises the very localised nature of Abbott's defeat. Far from a repudiation of Liberal values, it has been the repudiation of one individual's form of political action. ...
